The Dutch Council for Refugees and the Leiden Institute of Immigration Law kindly invite you to the symposium

External migration policies and the rights of refugees

At the Plenary Hall of the Senate (Eerste Kamer) of the Dutch Parliament

Friday 10 June 2011

Traditional asylum policies of European States focus on granting protection to a refugee by admitting him to their territory and abstaining from expulsion. Increasingly however, European States designate foreign territories as the primary place of protection. Attempts are undertaken to process asylum applications outside Europe and to build protection capacities in regions of origin. In parallel, deterrent mechanisms are put in place to prevent undocumented migrants from arriving at the EU external border: fishing boats carrying undocumented migrants are intercepted at the high seas, passports are checked at foreign airports and African border guards are trained and equipped under EU funding mechanisms.

The symposium questions how these policies affect the internationally protected status of refugees. Through what avenues can the European Union contribute to refugee protection globally? Is protection outside Europe a viable alternative? How should the EU cope with mixed flows of refugees and other undocumented migrants? The symposium brings together politicians, policy makers, academics and experts working in the field for a public discussion.
