Prevent spreading the coronavirus
Instructions for the use of our buildings

Radboud University is taking measures to prevent spreading the coronavirus. In so doing, the guidelines from the government and the National Institute for Public Health and the Environment serve as our point of departure.

Buildings are open

For as long as possible, the buildings (or parts thereof) on campus will remain accessible to the people who need to be on campus. However, different opening hours and a number of clear guidelines for the use of the various spaces apply.

Not all spaces are accessible. Study and resource centres, classrooms and open offices have been closed off. Other open locations, furnished with chairs and tables, have been marked off with red and white tape.

The following applies to everyone:

- Do not stay on campus longer than necessary.
- If possible, be in the room by yourself.
- A maximum of three people are allowed in one room, if they keep a distance to each other of at least 1.5 metres.
- Do not use a lift with other people.
- Respect the marked-off areas.
- Follow the instructions of the receptionist or the security officer.

Together, we can limit the spread of the virus and keep our buildings accessible.
