Citizenship and Migration: Europe's 21st Century Challenges

change perspective

Radboud University
Citizenship and migration raise fundamental questions about the nature and purpose of the European Union and its commitment to democratic values, human rights, and the rule of law. The Maastricht Treaty of 1992 introduced EU citizenship as a new political and legal concept intended to capture the relationship between the EU and (some) of the people living within its territory as well as signal the Union’s evolution from an economic organization to a political one. The failure to legally incorporate third country nationals in this new legal and political space started to be rectified with the creation of the Area of Freedom, Security and Justice in 1999, and the start of the common EU policy on migration and asylum.

In this course we unravel the interconnected fields of EU citizenship and EU migration law, and focus on understanding the differences that exist between EU citizens and migrants in relation to topics such as; the possibility to physically enter or leave the EU, the right to work or seek education, the right to family reunification or the right to be treated equally. While these issues are intrinsic to western understandings of what it means to be a citizen of a nation state, the EU dimension brings new challenges to the constitutional arrangements that legally define the relationship between people and administration within a given territory.

During the course, students will be able to engage with leading experts in the field of migration as well as receive feedback on their individual or collective work.

After this course you are able to
- Identify the challenges that EU citizenship and migration bring to core notions such as the state, membership, political community
- Gain a basic understanding of how the EU has dealt with questions of citizenship and migration.
- Develop critical thinking skills to assess the existing legal framework and EU initiatives in the field of migration
- Develop presentation and analytical skills on a topic relating to citizenship/migration
