Migrant Inclusion in Policy and Practice

change perspective

Radboud University
With increasing migration to Western Europe, inclusion and integration have become buzz words in politics, media and private and public organizations. Migrants in Europe continue to experience worse health, lower levels of employment and more discrimination than native populations. Although national and local governments continue to device inclusion policies, these do not always have their intended effects. To understand migrant inclusion from policy and practice, an interdisciplinary approach is necessary.

In this course, you will learn to approach migrant inclusion from an interdisciplinary perspective, taking into consideration how social and economic dimensions shape inclusion policies and practices. Members from the Radboud Network on Migrant Inclusion (RUNOMI) will provide an introduction to three domains of inclusion: economic integration, social integration and equality in public service provision. We will discuss the design, implementation and evaluation of effective policies and interventions from an interdisciplinary and critical perspective. The lectures will be followed by daily case discussions and assignments in small groups.

You will develop critical thinking skills regarding the conceptualization of migrant inclusion interventions, have an overview of current inclusion debates, and be able to analyse migrant inclusion policies drawing on an interdisciplinary understanding of the dimensions influencing inclusion outcomes.

After this course you are able to • Learn to approach migrant inclusion from an interdisciplinary perspective

• Gain knowledge about current debates and best practices regarding migrant inclusion
• Develop critical thinking skills regarding conceptualization of inclusion interventions
• Analyse migrant inclusion policies from an interdisciplinary understanding of the dimensions influencing inclusion outcomes
