Private International Law within the European Union

change perspective

Radboud University
Nowadays it is more and more common that legal relationships have cross-border character. In every case like this there is one very important legal question that arises: which law is applicable to the given case? Cross-border legal relationships within the EU provides freedom of movement, but can also cause conflict of rules that are in force in different Member States. That is the reason why the EU tries to create unified private international law in certain areas of private law, like contractual obligations or succession law.

In the introductory part of the course the main sources of private international law will be presented, with special focus on their relations towards each other. Along with the EU, being one of the most important international legislator in this matter, the Hague Conference of Private International Law and its work will be described. The second part of the course is an overview of main European and international legal instruments that provide rules governing jurisdiction, applicable law and recognition and enforcement of rulings in civil and commercial cases. The last part will be a short guide to carrying out research in private international law. The most important research institutes and libraries will be presented, as well as possibilities of scholarships and Internet websites with materials, papers, on-line lectures and news on private international law.
