Following interesting, small-sized classes like Forensic Psychology or relaxing at the campus pool underneath the palm trees between classes is pretty much what studying at Chapman University in California looks like. But studying abroad is much more than that: Making friends from all over the world that do not only give you insight to different perspectives of life but will also travel around with you to places that besides looking good on pictures will provide some of the greatest memories. Whether it's the breathtaking nature of Yosemite Park or the easy going city vibe of San Francisco, studying abroad will never get boring. I happily look back at the friendships I've made and places I've seen and can only advice anyone to take a chance and make their year special with a study abroad!
