Assistant Professor of International Relations

Are you an expert in the complexity and diversity of today's global political arenas? Then you have a part to play as Assistant Professor International Relations. You will conduct new and exciting research projects in your field, as well as help students understand how to manage conflict and cooperation in our current globalising world.

The Department of Political Science at Radboud University is looking for a broadly oriented and versatile university lecturer/assistant professor in International Relations. Specific expertise in the fields of International Political Economy and/or International Environmental Politics, and more particularly Climate Change, is preferable. Education and research in international relations at the Political Science Department reflect the diversity of International Relations as a subdiscipline of Political Science.

At the same time, it is characterised by theory-driven research and the importance of transferring diversity and theory-driven research to students of political science. Education in International Relations is embedded in the Bachelor's and Master's degrees in Political Science, both of which are praised for their coherence and quality. Our research in International Relations is part of the broader research programme of the Department of Political Science (entitled 'Legitimacy and Institutional Change') that focuses on the two subthemes of 'Conflict at the Crossroads of the Global and the National' and 'Sustainable Democracy'. Researchers also participate in multidisciplinary research groups at faculty and interfaculty levels.

Profile

- You have a PhD in the field of International Relations.
- You have a strong affinity with Political Science as a discipline, as well as with multidisciplinarity.
- You have teaching experience at undergraduate and graduate levels.
- You have knowledge of qualitative and quantitative social science research methods.
- You are able to publish in leading international peer-reviewed journals.
- You have research interests that fit well within the political science research programme.
- You have a clear medium-term view on your own expertise and niche within IR, including external fundraising.
- You have a team player mentality and a willingness to contribute to the organisation of education and research within the Political Science Department.
- You should hold a university teaching qualification (BKO) or equivalent.
- Knowledge of the Dutch language is recommended. You will be expected to be able to teach in Dutch after two years.
We are

Nijmegen School of Management (NSM) is an academic centre of research and higher education, focusing on institutional and managerial issues within complex organisations. There are seven disciplines within NSM: business administration, public administration, political science, economics and business economics, social and political sciences of the environment, human geography, and spatial planning. NSM strives for a multidisciplinary approach. NSM employs 330 FTEs, 75% of whom are academics. Currently, NSM has approximately 5,000 students.

The Department of Political Science at Radboud University is part of the Faculty of Management. The Faculty brings research and teaching together in 7 disciplines: Management Sciences, Public Administration, Economics, Political Science and Geography, Planning and Environmental Sciences. The Department of Political Science consists of a team of 45 staff-members.